

Black lives matter. Oppressed lives matter. Things need to change.

I'm proud of those who are using their voices and I'm proud of those who support humanity over it all. I'm upset that I was born in the time of this issue and 17 years later nothing has changed. I recognize all the pain and anger inside every one of us.

Think about it.

We all have problems in our lives. Some on a bigger scale. We push our thoughts down to the ground and suffocate them just as Floyd was.

Scream ur heart out and use ur voice, for ur thoughts are ought to be heard.

Make a difference and unite, for the colour of ur skin should not be the reason we are divided.

Just remember one thing.

The little girl in a classroom, being bullied by a race oppressed by others no longer believes they are oppressed. It's nobody's fault it's just a thought that is suffocating beneath her.

She sees signs of protest, she sees racism, she sees expectations of the colour of ur skin not being the reason u mistreat someone but that makes her wonder; then why was I treated that way by the people who are now claiming otherwise?

It goes out to everyone when I say; implement what u say... don't say racism is bad when ur racist towards others, don't say ur worth any more than any other human for any reason.

Being violent wont prove that you know how to be peaceful, rioting won't prove that you won't forget about it like many other forgotten names. Stop proving their stereotypes, don't be an opportunist!

Instead of trying to beat the system, try to fix it from the roots... the rest will find it's way.
